In Brazil there are around 100,000 HVCs in primary and secondary schools, representing almost 9% of the global population ([@B22]). In addition, the results on the desirability of the HVC's presence in the classes and their positive influence on the learning process are also in line with those of other researchers that indicate that the visibility of the instruments in the classrooms helps with their use and learning ([@B23]).

Considering the significant contribution of the HVC to the teaching/learning process, a study was conducted to evaluate the effects of placing them in the different schools in primary and secondary education in the city of João Pessoa, Paraíba. The study was analyzed in the subjects of 27 of the 50 schools in the city using a randomized clinical trial (RCT).

The results indicate that the use of the HVCs contributes with a significant improvement in the students' academic results when compared to the group that did not use them. For example, at post-test, the intervention group presented a performance gain of 0.144 points,
